A pathway to university success in Scotland

Cambridge International AS & A Levels are recognised by higher education institutions in Scotland as equivalent to UK GCE AS & A Levels.

Finding a course to study in Scotland

Scotland is home to almost 20 renowned universities and higher education colleges offering a variety of undergraduate degree programmes, including the University of Edinburgh, University of Aberdeen, University of Glasgow, Heriot-Watt University, Robert Gordon University and University of St Andrews.

Studying in Scotland

Scottish degree courses usually include four years of study, giving a broad and flexible education. This allows students to take a range of options before specialising. Additional subjects and depth can be added, giving a strong set of skills and knowledge to enter the graduate job market with.

You can find more information on the undergraduate courses available in Scotland by visiting individual university websites or the UCAS website at www.ucas.com/search

Some universities permit direct entry to the second year for highly qualified students applying for certain course areas. In these cases, students are expected to have performed strongly in their Cambridge International A Levels/Pre-U including in a number of relevant subject areas. Students are advised to contact universities directly to confirm whether second year entry is offered and the specific entry requirements for this. Advanced entry is not available in all subject areas. Applications for second year entry are still made through UCAS but the year 2 point of entry code must be selected.
